Strasbourg artist Mathieu Le Digabel, aka Petseleh, has been weaving a chiaroscuro universe since 2012, blending delicate grace with soaring pop moments. With a keen sense of melody and sharp songwriting, his songs both surprise and move the audience.

A first eponymous all-folk album was released in 2013, followed by a second, "The doubt and the revolution of reality" in 2017, where Mathieu invited friends from the local scene to play on 6 of his compositions. This experience pushed the singer to recruit musicians to offer a more indie rock version of Petseleh on stage and in the studio.

Backed by the Strasbourg label Collectif Kim since 2015, Petseleh keeps pushing beyond his own artistic boundaries.

The album you are about to discover today is the first full-band album: 14 love songs exploring how to keep a couple's flame alive after a life-shattering event — the femicide of a mother.

"Songs for Muriel" is the second part of a trilogy: a logical continuation of "The doubt and the revolution of reality" (the introduction "Dark was the horizon" is an obvious reference to the song "Song for B" from the previous album) and a more hopeful and uplifting chapter.

The musicians of the "band" for the album "Songs for Muriel" are:

- Mathieu Le Digabel: vocals, rhythm guitars (acoustic and electric)
- Philippe Bey: lead guitars, keyboards, effects, and tinkering
- Rodolphe Weishaar: bass
- William Lamy: drums, backing vocals, production

Always personal and passionate, often intimate, sometimes playful and inventive, Petseleh's melodies strike you like shivers from a newly discovered flavor.

In this sense, Petseleh, blowing hot and cold, or even both at the same time, delivers an audacious third album, with a finely crafted production and full of quirky ideas, taking detours that we will follow with our eyes closed.
